NEW YORK STATE ASSEMBLY

Dear Friends,

The paraprofessional long-term care workforce—nursing assistants, home health and home care aides, personal care workers, and personal care attendants—form the centerpiece of the formal long-term care system. These frontline workers provide hands-on care, supervision, and emotional support to millions of elderly and younger people with chronic illnesses and disabilities. Low wages and benefits, hard working conditions, heavy workloads, and a job that has been stigmatized by society make worker recruitment and retention difficult.

Direct care providers report unprecedented vacancies and turnover rates for paraprofessional workers. Increasingly, the media, federal and state policymakers, and the industry itself are beginning to acknowledge the labor shortage crisis and its potentially negative consequences for quality of care and quality of life. These shortages are likely to worsen over time as demand increases.

Some national data on turnover rates show that turnover rates average about 45 percent for nursing homes and about 10 percent for home health programs. High rates of staff vacancies and turnover have negative effects on providers, consumers, and workers. The cost to providers of replacing workers is high, quality of care suffers and workers in under-staffed environments suffer higher rates of injury.

The future availability of frontline workers does not look promising. There will be an unprecedented increase in the size of the elderly population as the “baby boom” generation ages. The United States Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) estimated that, in response to this rising demand, personal and home care assistance will be the fourth-fastest growing occupation by 2006, with a dramatic 84.7 percent growth rate expected. The number of home health aides is expected to increase by 74.6 percent and that of nursing assistants by 25.4 percent. While these projections suggest that the demand for workers will increase, the actual number of jobs may be tempered by the rate of economic growth and the extent to which clients are willing or able to pay. At the same time, as baby boomers approach old age, the pool of middle-aged women who have traditionally provided care will also be substantially smaller. Finally, with very low population and labor force growth, even a “normal” business cycle recession would likely yield only a modest increase in the number of unemployed who could become part of a frontline worker pool.

According to a recent publication from the New York State Association of Community and Residential Agencies (NYSACRA) titled Direct Support Professionals Make a Difference: Shouldn't They Also Make a Living?, “many organizations are experiencing losses of up to 40 percent for Direct Support positions.” It went on to say, “the result is a system verging on crisis.”

The following directory should be used as a tool to open a window of opportunity in the Mental Hygiene field. Its pages are filled with important content that lists both educational, pre-professional, para-professional, and professional opportunities in the field of Mental Hygiene. The New York State Assembly Mental Health Committee is proud to be able to provide this important resource.

It is our hope that this guide will help our youth to better connect with the people, communities, and educational opportunities that will provide them with increased chances for a successful life. This is a fundamental requirement in a civil society. Opportunity and achievement, unhindered, leads to a more informed citizenry that strengthens communities and enriches our entire nation.

This guide is a tool for empowering lives and communities. As Chairman of the New York State Standing Committee on Mental Health, Mental Retardation, and Developmental Disabilities, I hope you find this resource a useful tool that will become part of your library of reference materials.

Sincerely,

Peter M. Rivera
Chairman
Standing Committee on Mental Health, Mental Retardation, and Developmental Disabilities

College Sponsored Trainings / Certificates

The City University of New York offers undergraduate and graduate certificates in disability studies and the Kennedy Fellows career mentoring program.

The undergraduate certificate in disability studies consists of five courses: a non-credit college bridge workshop and 4 college courses totaling 12 college credits. It is offered through several CUNY colleges and is designed for direct care workers who provide services and supports to people with disabilities. CUNY's 4 course 12 credit graduate certificate in disability studies, offered through our new School of Professional Studies, is designed for incumbent workers with bachelor's degrees who provide direct care services to individuals with disabilities. The Kennedy Fellows Program provides tuition support and career mentoring for direct care workers who are pursuing undergraduate degrees in disability related fields at CUNY. These credited certificate and degree programs provide job related courses and credentials that open up career ladder opportunities for hundreds of frontline workers in the disability field every year. Graduates are prepared to assume leadership roles at public and non-profit agencies that serve people with disabilities.

Extraordinary Caregiver Recognition Program...

Recognition and Training for Developmental Aides, Home Health Aides and Family Caregivers

The Extraordinary Caregiver Recognition Program sponsored by the School of Social Welfare at Stony Brook University is designed to educate and train the unsung service providers who give hands-on care to the mentally ill and developmentally disabled. Often these caregivers, who come from many diverse cultural backgrounds, are the people for whom the developmentally disabled rely on for basic human needs. Although many of these frontline caregivers provide compassionate care above and beyond the call of duty, they rarely receive recognition and attention for their exceptional service. Until now!

The Extraordinary Caregiver Recognition Program allows administrators at Hospitals, Group Homes, Not-For-Profit and Home Care Agencies to recommend frontline caregivers for this program. The School of Social Welfare at Stony Brook University has designed a comprehensive education and training program that can help direct caregivers address the needs of older clients, and also help them, and their co-workers, cope with the stress of a demanding job. A wide range of down-to-earth subjects such as, family relationships, health, safety, finance, diversity and multicultural issues are addressed in this program. There are no written tests or reports required for this course, instead there are many practical, interactive workshops designed to help experienced caregivers address many of their difficult day-to-day challenges.

Geriatric Care Management Certificate Program

The School of Social Welfare at Stony Brook University has developed a geriatric care management training program to help government employees better serve older New Yorkers, and those who help them. Because people are living much longer than was the case twenty or thirty years ago, many New Yorkers contact their elected officials to help them address new and complex challenges. With that in mind, elected officials and government managers are encouraged to invite members of their staff to attend this education program.

The four Geriatric Care Management Education and Training workshops presented by the Schools of Social Welfare and Nursing at Stony Brook University are: (1) New Profile of Aging (2) Elder Law, Ethics, Finance and Housing (3) Family Relationships and Changing Care Needs (4) Health & Wellness. These workshops have been accepted for continuing professional education by several professions, including nursing, social work and law (workshop 2). All those who participate in training will be recognized for their efforts and those who participate in all four workshops will be awarded a Certificate of Achievement in Geriatric Care Management.
